Maddene i by Jealousy.

Julis Patent, who now iles dead at one of the Lille, France, hospitals, was a fair, pretty girl of not much strength of character or fondness for amusement of any sort, and with no more than the usual amount of the vanity of her sex. Her station in life was that of a cotton spinner. Aithough just eighteen, Julie had already had much experience of the world, having been forced by the early loss of her parents to earn her own living at a tender age. She had several affairs of the heart with the youth of her own calling, and has not paid such strict at-tention to the proprieties as she would have done had her mother been alive to watch ever her. For her time of life Jolie was a trifle blase, having exhausted most of the attractions within her reach, when she met, one evening a year ago, a handsome young house-painter named Engene Malfait. Eugene was the finest specimen of his sex with whom Julie had yet come in contact. With dark, flashing eyes, a wealth of raven balr and much innate courtesy, Eugene not to cure say case. With each order received by us for six boxes, accompanied with $5.00, we will send the purchasar our written guarantee to reideal, but exceeded them. Eugene, with ideal, but exceeded them. Eugene, with love-like blindness, refused to see any defects in his goddess. Being morally pure himself, he was not disposed to surpect others, especially in her whom he had cloth-ed, in his imagination, with all womanly virtues. Thus it happened that their court

Not from any companions of Julie was it that Eugene first heard that his fiauce's esreer had not been altogether above su-picion, but it was one of his own friends, who had heard her light. It spoken of at a ball. Following up these insinuations, Eugene's friend heard enough the way are agents for to warrant bim laying the matter before her prospective husband. Poor Julie had done sothing very bad, but had committed the fatal error of not confessing all to the man she adored. He was slow to suspect, but Eugene feit compe'led to listen when a valued friend spoke, and he followed up the cines which the latter placed in his hands. To this end he labored strenuously, and by the first of the present month he convinced himself, much sgatts; his wishes, that Julie

Malfait stunned by this discovery, did not hesitate for a moment in the course he intended to pursue. He made no sign that he knew aught of the past and for several days all went as before. Entirely willing to comply with his request, he asked her to meet him Tuesday night near an empty house he had been decorating. They entered, and what then happened is not known. It is supposed that the stern Maifalt forced Julie to confees and then proceeded to wreak his jealcus vengeance. She was ploked up by the police more dead than alive on the ground outside the window. The body was hacked and gashed in a terrible manner, and the knife has since been found. After committing the crime, Maifult washed his hands and left the house. He was subsequently arrested and brought in the presence of the dying girl. She identified him, and it remains to be seen whether a French jury will justify Engene's stern Puritablem by return-ing the usual verdict of guilty "with extenuating circumstances." To BOMBARD THE SKY -A dispatch from Midland, Texas, says: The rain makers are busy with preparations, and propose to day or to morrow as the time for the decisive experiment. Prof. Meyer and Custallar, balloonists, and Prof. Rosell, chemist, are manipulating the explosives, but as much remairs to be done the opicion prevails that there will be no rain produced before Thursday next. The rain of Tuesday last is thought not to have been caused by the explosion except as a coincidence. They are, however, hopeful of success in the final test. About fifty balloons inflated with explosive gas, as many kites with dynamite tails, and on terra firma mortars of rind rock will be discharged, not simultaneously, but in rapid encosssion, while scientific ob-servations will be taken by balloonists in mid air and General Dyrenforth and staff on earth, connected by telephone. The programme is elaborate and the material abus-dant, and the science involved exhaustive. Success means the regeneration of the coun-
